Audit Preparation

Having been “interrogated” in many audits and inspections over the last 25 years (including two FDA inspections and too many MHRA inspections to count) we know that they can be very stressful situations. If you are well prepared, know what to expect and most importantly, know where any weak points might be, you can remove some (but probably never all) of the stress.

We can help you prepare for audits by providing advice on how to run “front” and “back” rooms and methods of communication between them. We can also provide advice to plant operators and other personnel on how to respond to questions from auditors.

A strong back room team is essential, with a manager, key experts and runners. Good communication and organisation are vital. Some home-made cakes are also useful, especially if the inspectors are partial to baked goods at coffee breaks.
